Happy Easter friends... I want to thank everyone who was praying for me over the past couple of days. Everything went well considering that the doctor found another hernia on the left side and had to take care of that as well. He had felt it in the pre-operative surgeon's examination, but then backed off and said they would look over there after they got done with the right side. Beth reports he said the left side was not big, but he could have "passed a sleeve of ping-pong balls" through the one on the right side. I do not believe that he found any ping-pong balls while performing surgery though.

Currently I'm plenty sore, but will discontinue the opioids and move onto Ibuprofen tonight. My face was turning more red and more flush with each dosage, so time to take a rest from the heavy stuff. Besides as long as I'm on the opioids, I can't go back to driving or playing rugby.

I'll be staying home from church tomorrow, as there are some quite aggressive huggers there. I will miss sharing Easter with the body of Christ... which is not something to be taken for granted. Again... thanks so much for your prayers.
