Yodis in Ukraine

Eric Yodis · Yesterday at 5:02 AM · 🌐

Home at last! We finally rolled into Kyiv yesterday morning. Immediately Beth pointed out the plumes of smoke still billowing from the attack of the previous night. We passed and saw a number of inspectors in yellow vests with clipboards and tape measurers - no smoke, but a lot of broken windows and walls. We should have a few nights break though as Russia does not have the materials nor the logistics to repeat that level of bombing two nights in a row.

Thanks for your prayers. Eric's hernia repair held even after taking a heavy suitcase up to our third floor flat. Beth went right about setting the house in order. Eric's head spun around the room a few times until he fell fast asleep on the couch. Beth continued nesting until she couldn't deny the need to rest.

We are super-tired after just a few naps on the overnight bus, but Monday night is Bible study night at the IDP community. It was great to be back... great to see our team from four different churches working together like the body of Christ should. As I greeted the refugees, there was lots of hugs... and hope.
