Sermon Series

The Space Between: Discovering God in an Either/Or World February 22 - April 5

Lent calls us into the wilderness—not to reduce our lives to easy answers, but to sit honestly with tension, ambiguity, and transformation. We live in an either/or world that insists on sides, binaries, and quick conclusions. Yet the Gospel of Luke reveals a different way: a faith shaped not by rigid opposites, but by the holy space between them.

We will journey with Jesus through moments where life refuses to be neatly divided—and real transformation takes place not at the extremes, but in the living, breathing tension of life and faith.

Sermon Reflection

Words for Meditation: “The fruit comes through encounter—through the work of pollinators. The tree’s only role is to remain open.”

– Rev. Mark Feldmeir

Today’s Questions

- Where in your life might there be leaves without fruit—the appearance of faithfulness without the substance of it? What might God find by walking closely through the vineyard of your life right now?
- Who are the “pollinators” you’ve been avoiding—the stranger, the neighbor, the person on the margins of your world—whose presence might call forth something in you that you could never produce on your own?

Today’s Takeaways

1. Fruit _____ what leaves can _____.
2. The _____ has not _____ on you.
3. The _____ comes through _____.
