Sermon Series

The Art of One-Anothering:
Loving the People Right In Front of You
August 30–September 27

The New Testament uses the phrase “one another” more than fifty times—love one another, welcome one another, forgive one another, bear with one another, be patient with one another, encourage one another. The writers of the New Testament seem convinced that following Jesus isn’t mostly a private spiritual project. It’s something we practice together, in the ordinary friction and grace of shared life. And that’s harder than it sounds. In this series, we’ll explore what it actually looks like to live the way of Jesus with the people right in front of us. Come as you are. Bring the relationships you’re working on. This is the Christian life—practiced together.

Sermon Reflection

Words for Meditation: “Claiming the name of Christ does not mean we have mastered the love of Christ. We are all walking around in clothes we have not yet grown into.”
– Rev. Mark Feldmeir

- Where in your life right now are the “clothes” of compassion, patience, or forgiveness hanging loosely on you? What might it look like to keep wearing them anyway, trusting that grace is still growing you into them?
- Think of someone you’ve been holding a ruler up to, whether yourself or another person. What would it mean to put that ruler down and give them the same space to grow that God has given you?

Today’s Takeaways

1. Grace makes room for _____.
2. Grace makes time for _____.
3. Grace frees us from _____.
