Sermon Series

Echoes from Exile:
Ancient Voices for a Strange New Time
October 4 – November 1

There are moments when the world no longer feels like home—when the Empire’s values seem out of step with the life God calls us to live. Scripture has a name for that experience: exile. But exile, it turns out, is not only a place of loss. It is also a school—where God’s people have always learned how to stay faithful far from home. In this five-week series, we’ll listen for ancient echoes from God’s people who learned how to live faithfully in a world shaped by different values. We’ll explore what it means to stay rooted without assimilating, to resist without becoming hardened, and to cultivate a life shaped not by fear or power—but by love.

Sermon Reflection

Words for Meditation: “The pace of repression outstrips our ability to understand it.”
– Karis Nemik

Today’s Questions

- In this weary season, what has truly nourished my soul, and how might I make more room for what is life giving?
- What small, ordinary practices remind me who I am?
- What would it look like to stay awake to suffering without being consumed by it?
