The Payoff?

I ran across this article from Seth Godin, recently. It gave me pause to think - perhaps it will be for you also! The title of the article is, “Unpaid labor.” Here it is . . .

It’s possible you use social media to grow your business. Or to enhance your career. Or maybe it’s to find delight and joy.

When you add up all the tikking, tokking, tweeting, and clicking, what’s the return on that investment? Is your vacation more fun when you spend it taking photos for your Instagram followers? Are you feeding LinkedIn, or is it feeding you?

Labor is work that we get paid for. It’s work we wouldn’t do for free. And for most people on social media, it’s unpaid labor on behalf of the platforms.

If it’s paying off for you, keep going!

If it’s not, it might be worth reconsidering.

The simple test: when you do it more, do things get better?

Ouch! When all the doom scrolling, info seeking, FOMO, venting, arguing, etc., is done, I have to ask myself, “Is this paying off?” If so, keep doing it. Of course, the next question (assuming my answer is “no”), then why do I do it?

For whom am I laboring, venting, doomscrolling, etc. It’s worth considering.

But the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, forbearance, kindness, goodness, faithfulness, gentleness, and self-control. Against such things there is no law. ~ Galatians 5:22-23

Blessings for the week!

~ Harvey
