How does the concept of 'displaying Christ' in our daily lives differ from simply attending church or claiming faith, and what specific changes might this require?

Jesus said his mother and brothers are those who hear God's word and put it into practice. What does it truly mean to put God's word into practice rather than just hearing it?

Why do you think Jesus emphasized making 'every effort to enter through the narrow door' and warned that many will try but not be able to enter?

What is the difference between being confident in your own righteousness like the Pharisee versus being broken and humble like the tax collector who beat his breast?

Have you experienced a moment of genuine brokenness where you recognized your need for Christ, or have you taken a 'shortcut' approach to salvation?

Why do Christians often point to the thief on the cross as an example of easy salvation but rarely mention Zacchaeus who gave away half his possessions and made fourfold restitution?

What does it mean to 'die to yourself daily' as Jesus commanded, and how does this challenge the consumer mentality prevalent in modern Christianity?

How does the comparison trap affect our spiritual lives, and why is comparing ourselves to others rather than to Christ's standard dangerous?

If salvation truly transforms us, what evidence of transformation should be visible in our lives, relationships, and priorities?

Are you earnestly seeking God with the desperation of Zacchaeus climbing a tree, or have you become comfortable taking His grace for granted?
