Psalm 86:5–6

ABOUT THIS WEEK

It's frustrating when we break something important, like a favorite keepsake, but it's even more complicated when we hurt someone we care about. This week, we'll see how Peter denied knowing Jesus, but Jesus gave him a chance to show his love and rebuild their friendship. This proved that no mistake is too big to fix because Jesus helps us repair the harm we've done.

DISCUSSION

- What's one thing you actually don't mind cleaning because it feels so satisfying once it's done?
- What is something in your life that you would never let stay broken? On the flip side, what is something you wouldn't even bother fixing? Why?
- Can you think of a time when going back to how things were wasn't possible? In those situations, what do you think real repair looks like?
- Have you ever hurt a friend—maybe even without meaning to? How did you handle it? Have you ever been the one who was hurt? How did you deal with that?
- When you think about the way Jesus responded to Peter after Peter hurt their relationship, what stands out to you? Do you think you could respond that way to someone who hurt you? Why or why not?
- Read Psalm 86:5–6. How challenging is it for you to show yourself mercy when you've hurt someone? What makes that difficult?
- What keeps you from repairing what's broken?
- What's one way you can show mercy to yourself when you've messed up?
- Can you think of a time someone showed you mercy after you hurt them? How did that impact you?
- What relationship in your life do you need to take a step towards making things right? How can you trust Jesus to help you repair the harm?
