Dear Workcamp Volunteers,

This summer, you have gathered here in Detroit with one shared goal: to serve others and make a meaningful difference. That spirit of teamwork and commitment reflects something Detroit knows well—that great things happen when people work together toward a common purpose.

In hockey, success doesn't come from one player alone. It takes effort, trust, perseverance, and teammates willing to show up for each other every day. The same is true this week. Every home repaired, every conversation shared, and every act of kindness is part of something larger than any one individual.

Detroit is proud of its tradition of hard work, resilience, and community. For generations, our city has shown that goals are achieved through dedication, discipline, and supporting those around you. Those same values are alive in each of you as you step onto job sites and into neighborhoods to serve Detroit residents.

Whether the week brings hard work, laughter, new friendships, or moments of challenge, keep encouraging one another. Celebrate small wins. Lift your teammates. Stay focused on your goals. By the end of the week, the impact you leave behind will extend far beyond the homes you serve.

Best wishes for a great week,
The Detroit Red Wings
