1. When you hear the phrase "Into the Storm," what's your natural response? Are you someone who faces difficulties head-on, tries to avoid them, or waits for them to pass? Why? Share a storm that you have faced or walked through.

2. Read James 1:2–4. What do you think James means when he tells us to consider trials an opportunity for joy? How is that different from pretending suffering is good or acting happy when we're hurting?

3. Storms often reveal what we've been trusting. Have you experienced a difficult season that exposed something you were depending on more than God? What did you learn?

4. Read Romans 5:3–5. Which part of Paul's list; suffering, perseverance, character, or hope, is hardest for you to understand or experience? Why?

5. Think about the tribulum illustration. Is there something God has been revealing, refining, or changing in your life through a difficult season? How have you seen His grace at work?

6. The sermon ended with the declaration, "I am broken, but I'm Yours." What would it look like for you to bring your brokenness honestly before God this week rather than trying to hold everything together yourself?
