

Striving With

The potentials that are categories as striving with are about getting along with people. They often have something to accomplish but involve doing it with other people. Getting along with others is paramount to success, but, if overused, the striving with category can be in the way of progress when it overshadows other potentials needed for movement.

Judge

The judge is about making determinations, usually these with regard to competing ideas or people. Good judgements should be based on values and provide objectivity, providing an opportunity for restoration and unity. The risk of making too many or too strong of determinations about another person is the risk of them feeling judged by you.

Broker

The broker is trying to make new connections or leverage current ones. It looks for social events, knowing that connections happen by consistently being around people. Satisfaction comes from making a productive connection, even if it is not for itself. If not tempered, the broker can feel like the only reason for liking people is to make a sale.

Advocate

The advocate wants the less fortunate, underprivileged, weak person to have a voice. Empathy for these people gives the advocate strength and purpose. And although empathy is its strength, it can express itself aggressively and uncaring toward whoever is seen as the enemy of its cause.

Lover

The lover wants people to have good feeling. It provides support, care, affection, in practical ways. It recognizes the power of presence over persuasion. It doesn't seek to change someone, but make them feel valued as they are. Too much of this kind of affection can sacrifice reason for emotion and truth for feelings.
