Christmas Choir Practice

The Adult Choir will present Glory to the Newborn King the evening of December 20. Practice begins on Sunday, September 13, at 5:00 p.m., and meets every other Sunday night. Consider joining the choir, even if you’ve never sung in a group before. The only stipulation is that you must be willing to learn your part and be able to sing it well. We have learning aids available. No audition necessary!

New Tuesday Night Bible Study

The current Hebrews study concludes this week. After a week off, the group will begin a new study, The Godly Kings of Judah, by Cynthia Cavanaugh. It is available from Amazon for $14.99. If you’d like to join them on Tuesday nights at 6:15 p.m., beginning September 8, get your book and let Jessica Dimmitt know.

The Comfort of Surrender

By Grace Thomas

I sat alone in the hospital, sad and discouraged. After a shocking family loss, I was devastated and struggling. I didn't know when I'd get discharged or what the future would hold.

Spending time in that hospital made me rethink my priorities. Being out of control was uncomfortable and scary. I had no calendar or cellphone to keep me on track for the week.

Yet during that time, the Lord taught me an important lesson.

The Illusion of Control

I struggled with control because I wanted to manage every detail. If something was unplanned, I worried. Yet Jesus commands us to “not be anxious about tomorrow, for tomorrow will be anxious for itself. Sufficient for the day is its own trouble” (Matt 6:34).

This was hard to put into practice. At the hospital I couldn't keep my mind busy. One morning I walked through the halls, peering through various rooms. I noticed a small library and picked out a blue NASB Bible. Although everything around me was uncertain, I knew God's Word would provide comfort.

Demonstrating Self-Control

When I think about what it means to be in control, I'm reminded of Joseph's story. Despite being sold into slavery and imprisoned, Joseph surrendered control to God. In Genesis 43, we read that Joseph was overwhelmed by emotion after seeing his brother Benjamin after many years. Instead of lashing out in anger, however, he controlled himself (vv. 31–32).

Later, in Genesis 45:1, Joseph struggled to control himself when he saw all his brothers, who had mistreated him. Although Joseph did express his emotions, he also treated his brothers with kindness. This was a tense moment with others standing by, so he asked everyone to leave and wept so loudly that the Egyptians and the household of Pharaoh heard his cries.

As a powerful ruler, Joseph could have handled the situation with his brothers differently. Often, when there is something wrong, we want to get angry and lash out at others. Joseph did the opposite. He told them not to be grieved or angry, then pointed to the sovereignty and plan of God, which preserved his life (Gen 45:5). When unfavorable circumstances arise in our lives, we can give our emotions to God and treat others, even unkind people, with self-control. Joseph later led Egypt safely through the seven-year famine, ultimately saving both his family and the nation. No matter how challenging our circumstances may seem, God is in control.

Joseph's actions were in sharp contrast to those of others around him. His brothers lacked self-control and threw Joseph into a pit to satisfy their own desires. Potiphar's wife couldn't control her sexual urges and made inappropriate advances toward Joseph. We can learn from this example and trust God with the unfortunate events in our lives. Even bad situations can be redeemed to encourage others.

Looking Outwards

During my stay, I was so consumed by my worries that I didn't notice the needs of others. But towards the end of my visit, I looked around and saw many hurting people. One morning, I noticed an older woman sitting alone in a chair and slowly approached her.

"Hi, what's your name?"

She looked up with sunken eyes.

"Christine."

She nodded her head and went on to describe her situation. She frantically asked me for help with the phone and contacting her family. When she got really distressed, I sat down next to her, looked her in the eyes, and assured her everything would be okay. When she asked me to pray for her, I put my hand on her shoulder and slowly prayed for her health.

We can't always control our circumstances, but we can control our response. We can cry out to the Lord and point others to Jesus, knowing we don't have to worry about tomorrow because he is in control.

Don't Boast in Tomorrow

Now that I'm home, I'm still learning the lesson of control. On this side of heaven, we don't know what each day holds. I'm slowly learning to trust God with each day, hour, and moment.

As I reflect on this visit, I can say God used it for good. Although it was a hard stay, I see how God continues to use difficult circumstances to bring us closer to him and encourage us to surrender control. We never know what another day may hold, and it's unwise to boast about tomorrow.

"Come now, you who say, 'Today or tomorrow we will go into such and such a town and spend a year there and trade and make a profit'— yet you do not know what tomorrow will bring. What is your life? For you are a mist that appears for a little time and then vanishes. Instead you ought to say, 'If the Lord wills, we will live and do this or that'" (James 4:13-15).

Our lives are so short. Ultimately, each life is a mist that comes and goes. Instead of trusting in our own strength, we can trust God and his perfect will. So often I rely on myself and don't ask for the Lord's blessing and strength.

When I walked through those hospital halls, I was keenly aware of my needs. I needed food, medication, and counsel to stay stable. Yet God asks us to trust him in every area of our lives and not lean on our own understanding (Prov 3:5-6). Will you surrender control to the Lord?

Consider

What might it look like for you to surrender control? I appreciate Samantha Decker's words from her book Unhurried:

"When we hand over the little control we think we have to an almighty God, we gain the freedom and the peace he intends for us" (148).

We can trust God to handle our problems. Like a patient trusts a doctor, we can trust God to provide spiritual comfort for our hearts.

As Jesus began his earthly ministry, he repeatedly demonstrated he was in control, and we can still trust his sovereignty today. We can trust him when we hear the birds chirping in the distance or the flowers dancing in the wind (Matt 6:26-28).

There is comfort in knowing that Jesus did not simply offer his Word, but he came down in the flesh and experienced hardship and pain, too. He faced waves of emotions yet was always in control.

What does this look like for us? Surrender is a heart posture that recognizes God's sovereign hand in everything—whether we're like Joseph, standing in a courtroom overwhelmed by emotion, or lying in a hospital bed alone and afraid. For me, surrender comes from recognizing I'm not all-powerful, knowing, or sovereign, and this compels me to offer everything I have—my schedule, plans, and expectations—with open hands.

We can trust God to write our story, as we live each day in submission to his perfect will. When we're worried, may we look out and remember the birds and the flowers, tangible reminders that though we don't have control over tomorrow, God does. ❖

Creation Moments

Proclaiming Evidence for Truth

THIS WEEK'S CREATION MOMENT

What's a Siphonophore?

"God [is] not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do [it]? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good?"

- Numbers 23:19

It can be forty feet long. It can have many mouths and just as many stomachs. It swims along in the darkness more than 1,500 feet beneath the sea, reaching out for food with its lethal tentacles. This is not a creature invented for a new horror film. It's a siphonophore. A siphonophore is a collection of jellyfish that join into a huge colony. When they link up, some of the jellyfish act as mouths, others act as stomachs. Other jellyfish in the colony take care of the swimming, while yet others cast out their tentacles to gather food. When joined, they act as a single, huge creature.

The siphonophore is not the terror of the deep to all creatures. When the siphonophore's tentacles are extended for feeding, lantern fish and smelt gather. The smelt actually snuggle harmlessly among the tentacles. These fish are waiting for the scraps that result from the siphonophore's feeding. The siphonophore at dinner is also a good place to hide from other creatures.

God can make anything He wants. There are no limits to His imagination and power. Many people have said to us, "Doesn't an all-powerful God mean that God could have created everything any way He wanted? Couldn't God have used evolution?" The answer is, "Yes." But the God who created the universe itself is also the God who got it right the first time, every time. He said it was perfect. He did not do it by trial and error.

Missionary of the Week

Kendra S.
Team Expansion - South Asia

Visiting the South...

I recently visited one of the southern states for the first time which offered a meaningful contrast to my usual work in the north. I'm thankful for deep conversations and connections made with local drivers and for learning about new regional cultures. Taking time to step back, modeled so clearly by Jesus throughout His ministry, provided a much-needed period of rest and spiritual retreat with God. I'm thankful for this time away, and for how He used this time to refine my perspective, refresh my spirit, and grow me closer to His heart. It was also nice to be near the ocean again for a few days.

July 4th Celebrations...

For the US Independence Day, I was able to cook more American style food than I normally make and host friends for the evening. It was fun to have people over at my house and make food that we don't eat often here. The evening was filled with friends, quality conversations and even working on a puzzle together.

Back in the UK...

In mid July, I traveled to England to attend an event with like-minded friends working in different locations. It was an encouraging week filled with deep conversations, time to process challenges, and share stories of how Work is happening in our locations. I decided to plan on staying a couple of extra weeks to visit friends and have time away to rest after all that has been happening lately. It was encouraging and restorative to be back in the UK and have a break from the feelings of scrutiny that many of us have felt or faced the past couple of months and it helped me feel more refreshed and excited to return to work here.

You are Invited!!

I'm very thankful for the business and how it allows me to further invest in work here and make new friendships in the communities where we operate for tours with clients. I would love for friends to come and invest in taking tours with us and experience first hand what life here is like. If you or someone you know would like to come for a tour, I would love to connect more and talk about what your trip can look like. Please reach out if you'd be interested in talking more about this opportunity to come and experience a taste of our region for yourself.

Praise Points

- I'm thankful for time in the UK and that friends got their paperwork in time to also join.
- I'm thankful for reconnecting with friends and spending time with the community from my first ever international trip 21 years ago back in Scotland.
- I'm thankful for the opportunity to rest and enjoy the beauty and peacefulness of God's creation in the UK and have quality time with friends there.
- I'm thankful for favor with immigration officers coming and going and for the work that I'm able to continue to be a part of here.

Prayer Points

- Please pray for my housing situations - both of the locations where I stay are currently facing challenges that could mean I need to move soon. Pray for wisdom on if I should stay with my current locations or if I'm being led to new spaces.
- Please pray for friends that have had to leave our region for now but are praying and seeking God's direction for their next steps.
- Please pray for the business. We are currently facing some paperwork issues and working to get things resolved - please pray that God will give us wisdom in how to respond and what action to take and for everything we need to be approved soon.
