A few questions and ideas to consider throughout the week…
How does our Lutheran belief that we are all both "sinner and saint" shape how you read this passage about the last judgment? Everyone in this story is surprised, whether they are labeled a sheep or a goat; what are some ways we could practice seeing God when we look at other people? What makes it hard to see God, and can you think of any spiritual "lenses" that might make it easier to see God?

A few questions and ideas to consider throughout the week…
How does our Lutheran belief that we are all both "sinner and saint" shape how you read this passage about the last judgment? Everyone in this story is surprised, whether they are labeled a sheep or a goat; what are some ways we could practice seeing God when we look at other people? What makes it hard to see God, and can you think of any spiritual "lenses" that might make it easier to see God?

A few questions and ideas to consider throughout the week…
How does our Lutheran belief that we are all both "sinner and saint" shape how you read this passage about the last judgment? Everyone in this story is surprised, whether they are labeled a sheep or a goat; what are some ways we could practice seeing God when we look at other people? What makes it hard to see God, and can you think of any spiritual "lenses" that might make it easier to see God?

A few questions and ideas to consider throughout the week…
How does our Lutheran belief that we are all both "sinner and saint" shape how you read this passage about the last judgment? Everyone in this story is surprised, whether they are labeled a sheep or a goat; what are some ways we could practice seeing God when we look at other people? What makes it hard to see God, and can you think of any spiritual "lenses" that might make it easier to see God?
