

Happy Friday

For most of us, the word church brings a place to mind—a building, a sanctuary, somewhere we go on Sunday morning.

But what if Jesus imagined something much bigger? This Sunday, we're continuing our CONNECTING series with Connected to a Common Place, asking a simple question: Where is the church of Jesus actually located?

Jesus moved the focus away from sacred locations and toward people. The early church discovered that God could not be contained by a temple, a building, or an address. Instead, God's presence goes with his people. That changes what it means to go to church. The church isn't simply somewhere we go. It's who we become together—and what we carry into our neighborhoods, workplaces, schools, families, and communities.

This Sunday, we'll explore what that means for us—and why the most sacred thing in our building might actually be the person sitting next to you. Also — For all the parents, students, and teacher out there: we know that Back to School in Davison is this week, and we will be offering a prayer and blessing as you return to classes and schools.

P.S. — Find Your Connection!

After the service, stick around for our CONNECTION FAIR

You'll have an opportunity to meet people and explore the different groups, ministries, teams, and ways people are connecting at DFMC. There's no pressure to sign up for everything—or even anything. Come look around, ask questions, meet someone new, and see if there's a connection that feels right for you. Because connecting isn't just about finding something to do.

It's about finding people to do life with.
