Ezekiel 47 “River of God” Reflection Questions 08/09/2026

1. What stood out to you most from Ezekiel’s vision of the river from Ezekiel 47?
2. Why do you think it is significant that the river begins in the temple, the place associated with God’s presence?
3. The river begins as only a trickle. Is there a “trickle” in your life right now—some small evidence that God may already be working—that you have been overlooking?
4. Ezekiel moves from ankle-deep water to knee-deep, waist-deep, and finally water too deep to cross. At what point does he begin to lose control of his own movement? Why is that significant?
5. What is the difference between asking God to help us with our plans and allowing God to determine where the river carries us?
6. The river deliberately flows toward the Dead Sea. What does that reveal about the heart of God?
7. The sermon says, “The river carries within itself something greater than the environment into which it flows.” What does that mean for a Christian living in a difficult or spiritually unhealthy environment?
8. Ezekiel 47:11 describes marshes near the river that remain unchanged. What do you think this teaches us about being close to what God is doing without personally responding to Him or being “in the river”?
9. What is the difference between attending church, hearing sermons, or being around spiritually alive people and actually being “in the river”?
10. The sermon says, “God never intended you to be the destination of His river. He intended you to become part of its flow.” What would it look like practically for the Holy Spirit’s life to flow through you into someone else’s “dead place”?
11. Think about the two closing questions: “Where does this river need to flow in me?” and “Where does God want His river to flow through me?” How would you answer each of those questions right now?
