Hymn: Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty. #1

Prayer of Confession:

Risen Lord, we confess that we are often like those travelers on the road, encountering your grace and failing to notice. You draw near in our sorrow, yet we cling to despair. You speak words of life, yet we are slow to listen. You reveal the truth of Scripture, yet we resist its challenge. Forgive us, we pray. We confess that we let disappointment shape our faith more than the promise of your resurrection. Forgive us for turning inward when you call us outward in love. Open our eyes, Lord, that we may see you. Open our ears, that we may hear your voice. Open our hearts, that they may burn within us again with the good news of your redeeming grace. Help us to recognize you in the breaking of the bread, in acts of compassion, and in the fellowship of your people. Renew in us a steadfast faith that does not depend on what we can see or control. Restore to us the joy of your salvation, and send us back onto the road as witnesses to your love. Through your mercy, transform our doubt into trust, our fear into courage, and our wandering into faithful discipleship. Hear us now as we open our hearts to you in the silence...

Much of the imagery of this hymn comes from Revelation 4:2–11, which its author, an Anglican bishop, knew as a reading appointed for Trinity Sunday. The tune, written specifically for this text, reinforces the Trinitarian theme by strong dependence on the D-major triad.

The first woman to publish a collection of her own anthems, this author/composer has created in this hymn a sung prayer for illumination. It not only asks God to help us understand Scripture but also prays for the strength and courage to make God's love known to others.
